Thai Enquirer Summary

Political News

- The severity of the planned protest that starts tomorrow seems to be very visible from the 3-4 issues
  - ❖ Embattled Prime Minister Prayut Chan-o-cha came out on TV Pool late yesterday to say that he was listening to the demands of the students and there was little need for the students to come out to protest.
  - ❖ As many as 10,000 police and military officials are set to monitor the situation
  - ❖ A command centre has been set up to monitor the situation with Deputy Prime Minister Prawit Wongsuwon to lead this monitoring unit.
    - A lot of the important documents have been moved out of the Government House as a precautionary measure.
- The number of protestors are now expected to be as high as 100,000 or more from local and international media outlets reporting that the expected number is set to rise despite the expected torrential rain that is set to pour in the city starting today.

- Just a day away from a major rally by the “United Front of Thammasat and Demonstration”, embattled Prime Minister General Prayut Chan-o-cha used COVID-19 as a reason for student protesters to reconsider their planned rally tomorrow (September 19).
  - ❖ In a 10-minute speech on TV Pool, Gen Prayut came out to make an appeal to anti-government groups to put off plans to hold rallies at least until the Covid-19 outbreak is over.
  - ❖ The Prime Minister urged Thai people to unite in ending the Covid-19 crisis before focusing on political issues in a televised address yesterday (September 17) evening.
  - ❖ Prayut said rallies at this time would put Thailand at the risk of a second wave of Covid-19 infections, which would affect the livelihoods of more than 10 million people and further exacerbate the economic situation. He warned that people should not do anything that would prompt another lockdown.
    - “I can hear what you all want, and what you all are looking for, and I respect what you all are dissatisfied with, but today Thailand needs to come out of the economic malaise that the COVID has heaped upon us.”
    - “Once we are able to get out of this we can come back to the political issues.”
  - ❖ Gen Prayut though warned student activists not to break the law during their planned protest this Saturday, as he reassured that he has instructed the police to treat protesters “gently” but dropped in an English saying ‘You get what you pay’ during his speech to remind protesters of consequences of their action.
    - “Many countries have taken a very strong stance against protests but I have taken a different approach of being gentle because the protestors are young.”

- ❖ A source from the Government House said Gen Prayut will be kept in a “safe” zone. He was advised by security agencies not to make any command to authorities to deal with protesters himself. The task was left for Deputy Prime Minister Gen Prawit Wongsuwon.
- ❖ Security agencies now said they received information that protest leaders have changed plans to march to the King Rama V Equestrian Monument, instead of Government House. Police will be deployed to block protesters at the Makkhawan Rangsan Bridge.
- Meanwhile, Panasaya Sitthijirawattanakul, a leader of the United Front of Thammasat and Demonstration (UFTD), came out to slam Gen Prayut’s move to use the virus to threaten protesters. She said the government is only good at making up a story to threaten people while it is the one responsible for the spread of the virus when it allowed Egyptian and United States soldiers into Thailand.
  - ❖ Panasaya ensured the public measures will be in place to control the virus from spreading among crowds. She told Gen Prayut to worry about himself instead and confirmed that the major rally scheduled for September 19 will go ahead as planned.
- The 6 opposition parties led by Pheu Thai Party leader Sompong Amornvivat issued a statement calling on Gen Prayut to bow to student activists’ demands or he put the country at risk of being engulfed in flames and Gen Prayut himself will not have a place to stand in the country.
  - ❖ Sompong made clear that:
    - The opposition supports students to express their political views under the rule of law, calling on the government to provide a safe space for them to express their freedom of speech without intimidation.

- It supports student activists' demand for a rewrite of the 2017 constitution designed to prolong the power of the coup makers. Sompong called for MPs and senators to help push for a motion seeking an amendment to Section 256 to pave the way for the setting-up of a charter-drafting assembly.
- The opposition parties want senators to join forces with all stakeholders to push for the abolition of Section 272 to scrap the Senate's power to join MPs' vote for a prime minister. They called for senators to put aside their own interests and find a way out to the current political impasse.
- Meanwhile, former Election Commission (EC) Somchai Srisutthiyakorn came out to advise Gen Prayut to follow his 4 easy ways to help him quell protesters who will join the planned student-led rally on September 19.
  - ❖ Somchai's 4 recommendations including
    - An amendment to Section 256 by removing the clause that said charter changes require the support of at least one-third of the Senate (84).
    - The formation of a charter-drafting assembly that is politically neutral.
    - The abolition of Section 272 to scrap the Senate's power to join MPs' vote for a prime minister.
    - The abolition of Section 269 to put an end to appointed senators and return to Section 107 of the constitution which says that 200 senators are to be selected by candidates voting among themselves.

- ❖ Somchai advised Gen Prayut to “man up” and follow his 4 advices; he guaranteed the number of protesters will shrink to only several thousands.

- The Coordination Centre for Vocational Students and People Protecting the Institution yesterday (September 17) marched from the Southern Association to the Progressive Movement’s headquarters at the Thai Summit building to call for its leader Thanathorn Juangroongruangkit to stop offending the Royal Institution, be grateful to the motherland, stop lending support to the Free Youth demonstrations. The group told Thanathorn not to use students as a political tool.
- ❖ The group insisted that it had no plan to hold a rally to counter a major rally led by The United Front of Thammasat and Demonstration (UFTD) tomorrow (September 19).

- Meanwhile, Assistant Professor Dr Munin Pongsapan, Dean of the Faculty of Law, Thammasat University, has announced the closure of the Tha Prachan campus and cancellation of classes on Saturday and Sunday for the safety of staff members, students and property.
  - ❖ The order coincides with the planned protest by the UFTD.
  - ❖ All the gates, except the one facing the Phra Arthit Road, will be closed for two days and any officials or students who want to enter the campus must produce their ID cards and explain the reason for their entry.
- Sanam Luang, which is usually cordoned off to normal people has been opened up, so says reports.
- On other news, Prime Minister Gen Prayut Chan-o-cha has transferred Pol Col Roongroj Phuthiyawat, director of the Public Warehouse Organisation (PWO)'s central administrative office, who allegedly implemented the purchase without the board's authorisation, to an inactive post at the Prime Minister's Office pending disciplinary and criminal probes.
  - ❖ The transfer is said to be because Pol Col Roongroj signed his name to endorse a purchase contract with Guardian Gloves Co for 500 million boxes of surgical gloves to an exporter without the board's approval.
  - ❖ A 2-billion-baht down payment was paid to Guardian Gloves Co in Nakhon Pathom and that money would also have to be confiscated while the PWO probes the embezzlement claim with both the Department of Special Investigation and the Anti-Money Laundering Office against Pol Col Roongroj.

- ❖ Pol Col Roongroj, meanwhile, denied any wrongdoing and said he was ready to explain to a fact-finding committee that he had to fast-track the purchase order to stem the PWO's rising debts and steer it through a financial crisis.
- ❖ The board cancelled the purchase order yesterday (September 17), saying that Pol Col Roongroj was only acting PWO director at the time he approved it in August. He was not authorised to approve any project costing more than 50 million baht without seeking prior permission from the board.
- ❖ Guardian Gloves was registered on June 22, 2020 with a registered capital of 2.5 billion baht. The company has 1 director Thanarat Hatsri and its head office in Bang Lane District, Nakhon Pathom.
- The National Anti-Corruption Commission (NACC) revealed yesterday (September 17) the assets and liabilities of former deputy prime minister Somkid Jatusripitak and Suvit Maesincee, former minister of Higher Education, Science, Research and Innovation.
  - ❖ In its report, the anti-graft body said Somkid and his spouse had combined assets worth 149,366,248 baht and no debts when leaving office on July 15, 2020. Somkid accumulated about 43,560,716 baht during his tenure and his spouse earned 92,938,712 baht; most of which are savings, land, buildings and properties.
    - It is noted that Somkid's assets rose by 2,449,320 baht during his term in office.
  - ❖ Meanwhile, Suvit reported a total assets of 77,861,196 baht when leaving office on July 16, 2020 while his spouse had assets worth 14,873,438 baht. Suvit has debts totalling 10,300,000 baht. Most of Suvit's assets are land and buildings, jewellery and valuable items. Suvit also reported having 139 ancient artefacts as he is a serious collector of ancient artefact. However, Suvit's assets dropped by 580,289 baht after leaving office on July 16 compared to the day he first took office while his liabilities remain the same.
