 - ❖ The group called on supporters to meet at 13.00 hours today at Tao Poon MRT Station, Exit 4, before marching 2.2 kms to the parliament complex. The group invited the public to create a new page in the Thai history by joining its march to take back sovereignty to the people.
 - ❖ Earlier, iLaw announced that it had gathered more than 100,611 signatures, well above the 50,000 required for citizens to submit a bill to Parliament.
 - ❖ The media reported that iLaw plans to present a people's version of a bill to draft a new constitution to Parliament on September 24.
 - ❖ However, House Speaker Chuan Leekpai said it is unlikely that iLaw's charter amendment motion will be placed on the House meeting agenda within this parliamentary session before the House goes in recess on September 25.

 - ❖ The outgoing army chief told the media to keep the ethics code of conduct and take into account of ethical principles and moral obligation. Gen Apirat then recommended the media to watch “The Social Dilemma” on Netflix which raised the issues of social media addiction and the pros and cons of social networking.

- Following the disappearance of a pro-democracy plaque placed by protest leaders near the Grand Palace in Bangkok overnight, a plastic plaque---resembling an old one commemorating Siam’s transition from absolute monarchy to constitutional democracy in 1932---turned up and was placed at the same spot in Sanam Luang ground where the plaque that went missing.

- ❖ Upon an unknown person's attempt to install the plastic plaque in Sanam Luang ground, the Department of City Planning reportedly instructed officials to remove the plaque from the site to see if anyone will take back the plaque. The department said it plans to hand over the plastic plaque to Chana Songkram police to look for its owner.
- ❖ Earlier, police have come out to say that they have removed the protesters' democracy plaque from Sanam Luang, to be used as evidence against at least 16 protest leaders who are facing multiple charges, including lese majeste, Royal Thai Police spokesman Pol Lt Gen Piya Uthayo told the media yesterday (September 21).
- ❖ Police are now looking to bring charges against each individual and those who were behind the scenes of the weekend protest.
- ❖ Police said the plaque had been handed over by officials from the Bangkok city authority and the government's Fine Arts Department. An officer said it was to keep as evidence to press charges against protesters.
- ❖ Upon the removal of the pro-democracy plaque, Parit "Penguin" Chiwarak co-leader of the United Front of Thammasat and Demonstration (UFTD), said the plaque is in the heart of protesters. He came up with the idea of distributing the original file of the plaque model to protesters so that they can make a mould of the plaque and place them in various sites across Bangkok.

- Dr Tul Sithisomwong, leader of the self-styled Multi-Coloured Group, yesterday (September 21) filed a complaint with Chana Songkhram police against 3 protest leaders - Panusaya “Rung” Sithijirawattanakul, Arnon Nampa and Parit “Penguin” Chiwarak.
 - ❖ Dr Tul accused the 3 leaders of the weekend protest rally at Sanam Luang by the United Front of Thammasat and Demonstration (UFTD) of lese majeste under Section 112 of the Criminal Code, and the other over the installation of a plaque symbolising democracy, allegedly in violation of the law on ancient monuments, antiques, objects of art and national museums which applies to Sanam Luang.

during Saturday's question-and-answer round which coincided with a huge anti-government rally in Bangkok.

- ❖ When asked what she would say to each side to prevent violence between the protesters and the government, Pacharaporn replied "With my heart, I choose the protesters," "The people have the right to express their views on what is best for the country."
- ❖ She went on to address the issue in English to the government by saying:
 - "If you call this country Thailand, we need a real democracy. And so, we need you to get out of the country."
- ❖ Her answer upset government supporters who hit back at Pacharaporn on social media, many using racist insults like "negro" and "coal-black" in referring to Pacharaporn's dark complexion.

- The Election Commission (EC) cleared 31 political parties of breaking financial borrowing rules since the loans in question as it said the loans were less than 10 million baht each.

- ❖ The EC said a probe into the finances of 31 parties found the loans and advances extended by party leaders or executives with no interest were considered “other benefits”.
 - ❖ None of them exceeded the 10-million-baht limit per donor per year. Future Forward Party, on the other hand, borrowed 191.3 million baht in total from its leader, said EC Secretary-general Jarungvith Phumma.
 - ❖ The probe is a result of a petition filed by political activist Srisuwan Janya who asked the EC to look into the Future Forward Party’s borrowings among 32 parties and determined whether they violated the political parties’ law.
 - ❖ The EC in December last year forwarded the case to the Constitution Court, which ruled in February the loans extended to the party by former leader Thanathorn Juangroongruangkit, leading to the party dissolution and a 10-year ban from politics for its executives.
